

This is about Investing in Collaboration.

For collaboration to work, instead of pushing an idea or agenda on a group, there is a mutual discovery and potential for something new to emerge.

Real collaboration enables us to develop ideas and solutions that could only emerge from this combination of people thinking and working together.

Traditional leadership skills come up short when we are working to develop innovative solutions to complex problems.

Climate breakdown and environmental breakdown are examples of where there is no single solution to the problem.

As we try to organize, we experience a bit of discomfort trying to achieve a greater impact and a stronger political voice.

Youth movements and Extinction Rebellion are creating what Joanna Macy calls, "Holding Actions."

These are actions to hold at bay and slow down the impacts of Climate and Environmental breakdown to buy us more time.

The question is, "How do we get these groups involved in electoral politics, vote Green and join The Green Party?"

The Green Party is the only party that is remotely serious about the kind of agenda the youth movements and Extinction Rebellion are talking about.

The agenda that will determine our future.

The Green Party has the political structure for these groups to build on.

The challenge is that in order to get to that, there is a time early on where you must bring everyone together without a clear vision or a clean plan.

The Real prizes to be gained from collaboration may lie beyond our comfort zone.